Level I. Forms 2

The Addam family lives in a big house in Liverpool. Mr Addam works in a school. He is a teacher. Mrs Addam is at home. She hasn't got a job now. Mr and Mrs Addam have two children – Jacky and Bill. They are students. Jacky is eight years old. She likes watching TV. Bill is ten. He doesn't like watching TV, but he loves playing video games. They are happy family.

Level II. Forms 3-4

Good morning, class 6 and welcome to Green Trees Zoo on this sunny Thursday. My name is David Edwards and I'm the zoo keeper. It is always good to welcome children from Park Street School in Manchester. Today, the tenth of April, is a very special day. We have a new baby tiger for you to see. Her name is Ellie and she was born three weeks ago. She likes to eat ice-cream but usually eats meat. Her mother Martha is a good mother and plays with Ellie a lot. They really like to play football. It is now ten o'clock. Let's go! But be very quiet, Ellie might be asleep.

Level III. Forms 5-6

Hello, and welcome to the school's television this morning. At 11 o'clock we'll be going to London for a programme about good food called Eat Well. Then at 12 o'clock pop singer Michael White talks about music and sings some of his great songs. He will sing six of his songs that will finish with his favourite "You are the Sunshine". If you can't watch this programme today, you can also see it on Monday morning at 11 o'clock. At 2 o'clock this afternoon, Tony Smart shows you how to paint pictures. Then at 3 o'clock today there is a drama called On the Farm, and it's about a farmer and his large number of animals. On the Farm stars Jason Davis and his favourite dog Bob. We shall end our programmes for today as usual with a 4 o'clock news programme, which is five minutes long. Tomorrow is Friday eleventh of April when there will be no programmes as it is a public holiday. There is a special new programme next Monday, which is all about swimming, but now it's time for more great programmes.

Level IV. Forms 7-8

- Oh, hi, David. Thanks for coming. How are you?
- I'm fine, thanks. It's cold though, isn't it? I hope you've got the fire on.
- Don't worry. It's lovely and warm in the living room. Quick, come inside. Would you like a coffee or something?
- A coffee would be great, thanks. Shall I help you make it?
- No need. I made a fresh pot just before you arrived. Here you are.
- Mmm, that's better.
- So, I've got everything prepared for the trip. All the details have been finalised. Jim and Susan have paid their quota and agreed on the itinerary. Now all we need is your money and your OK.
- Sorry, I know I've been a bit slow getting back to you, but I had so much to do for my thesis.
- We've all been working hard, most of us with exams, you with your thesis. Here's the itinerary. I think you'll like it. And here all the places we'll be going to are marked on the map.
- Let me see, leaving on the twenty-fourth, yes, that's okay, Paris on the morning of the twenty-fifth. We're taking the night train, are we? I hope you've booked us a sleeper. I don't like the idea of sitting up all night.
- Of course, I have, David. I told you. For though none of us have very much money, no one wants to sacrifice comfort. We'll save money on other things like meals in restaurants for example. Rather than staying in hotels, we'll try and stay in hostels, so we can cook our own food. That will make a huge difference.
- Well, I hope you and the others can cook. I'm absolutely hopeless. I can't even boil an egg.
- That's okay. You can be in charge of washing up. You can do that, can't you?
- Don't be ridiculous. I'm the world's finest washer-up.
- Good.

Level V. Forms 9-11

- Well, how did your backpacking adventure go? You went round Europe for a month, didn't you?
- Well, we actually came back after just over three weeks. Our train tickets were valid for a month, but we ran out of money and energy, but it was fun and I'd thoroughly recommend it to anyone who wants to go long distances on little cash.
- Tell me all. Did you go alone?
- No, I went with three friends and we'd agreed on our route before setting out, just to avoid arguments later. We had to change some of our plans later on when we realised that places described as "unspoiled by tourism" often meant there was nothing to do or see and nowhere to stay. When possible we arranged our journeys so we could travel by night. This meant sleeping on the train, which was cheap and relatively comfortable, otherwise we slept at campsites. Youth hostels were packed solid in August, so we kept well away from them. Unfortunately my little tent wasn't very waterproof. I found this out the hard way during a violent thunderstorm. I, my sleeping bag and everything got absolutely soaked.
- Hah! Not very pleasant.
- Oh, it wasn't so bad. We had to stay there a day while I dried out the stuff, which gave us time to relax on the beach.
- Weren't you worried about getting robbed?
- I'd spoken to some other guys who'd had everything pinched while they were sleeping, so wherever we went I always slept with my passport and money at the bottom of my sleeping bag.
- Would you go again?
- Oh, yes. In fact we are all saving up for our next adventure to South America.
