I never believed we'd leave the city. But my mum was offered a job as a bank manager in a town five hundred kilometres away on the southern coast. My dad had always wanted to live by the sea and so it was decided. At first, I was excited about moving to the seaside but as departure day got nearer, the idea seemed less attractive. As we drove south, I cried and cried. I was leaving behind the first 14 years of my life. I didn't like our new house and there weren't any neighbours of my age. On my first day at school

I had to introduce myself, but no one could understand me because of my northern accent. Luckily there was another new girl in the class so we sat together. But it was more than a week before I had the courage to chat with the others. At first, I argued even more than usual with my mum and dad, but it hasn't all been bad. They've learnt to trust me and they now give me much more independence than my old city friends have. I visited them during the holidays and I've made many new friends here too.
